My Dear Sir

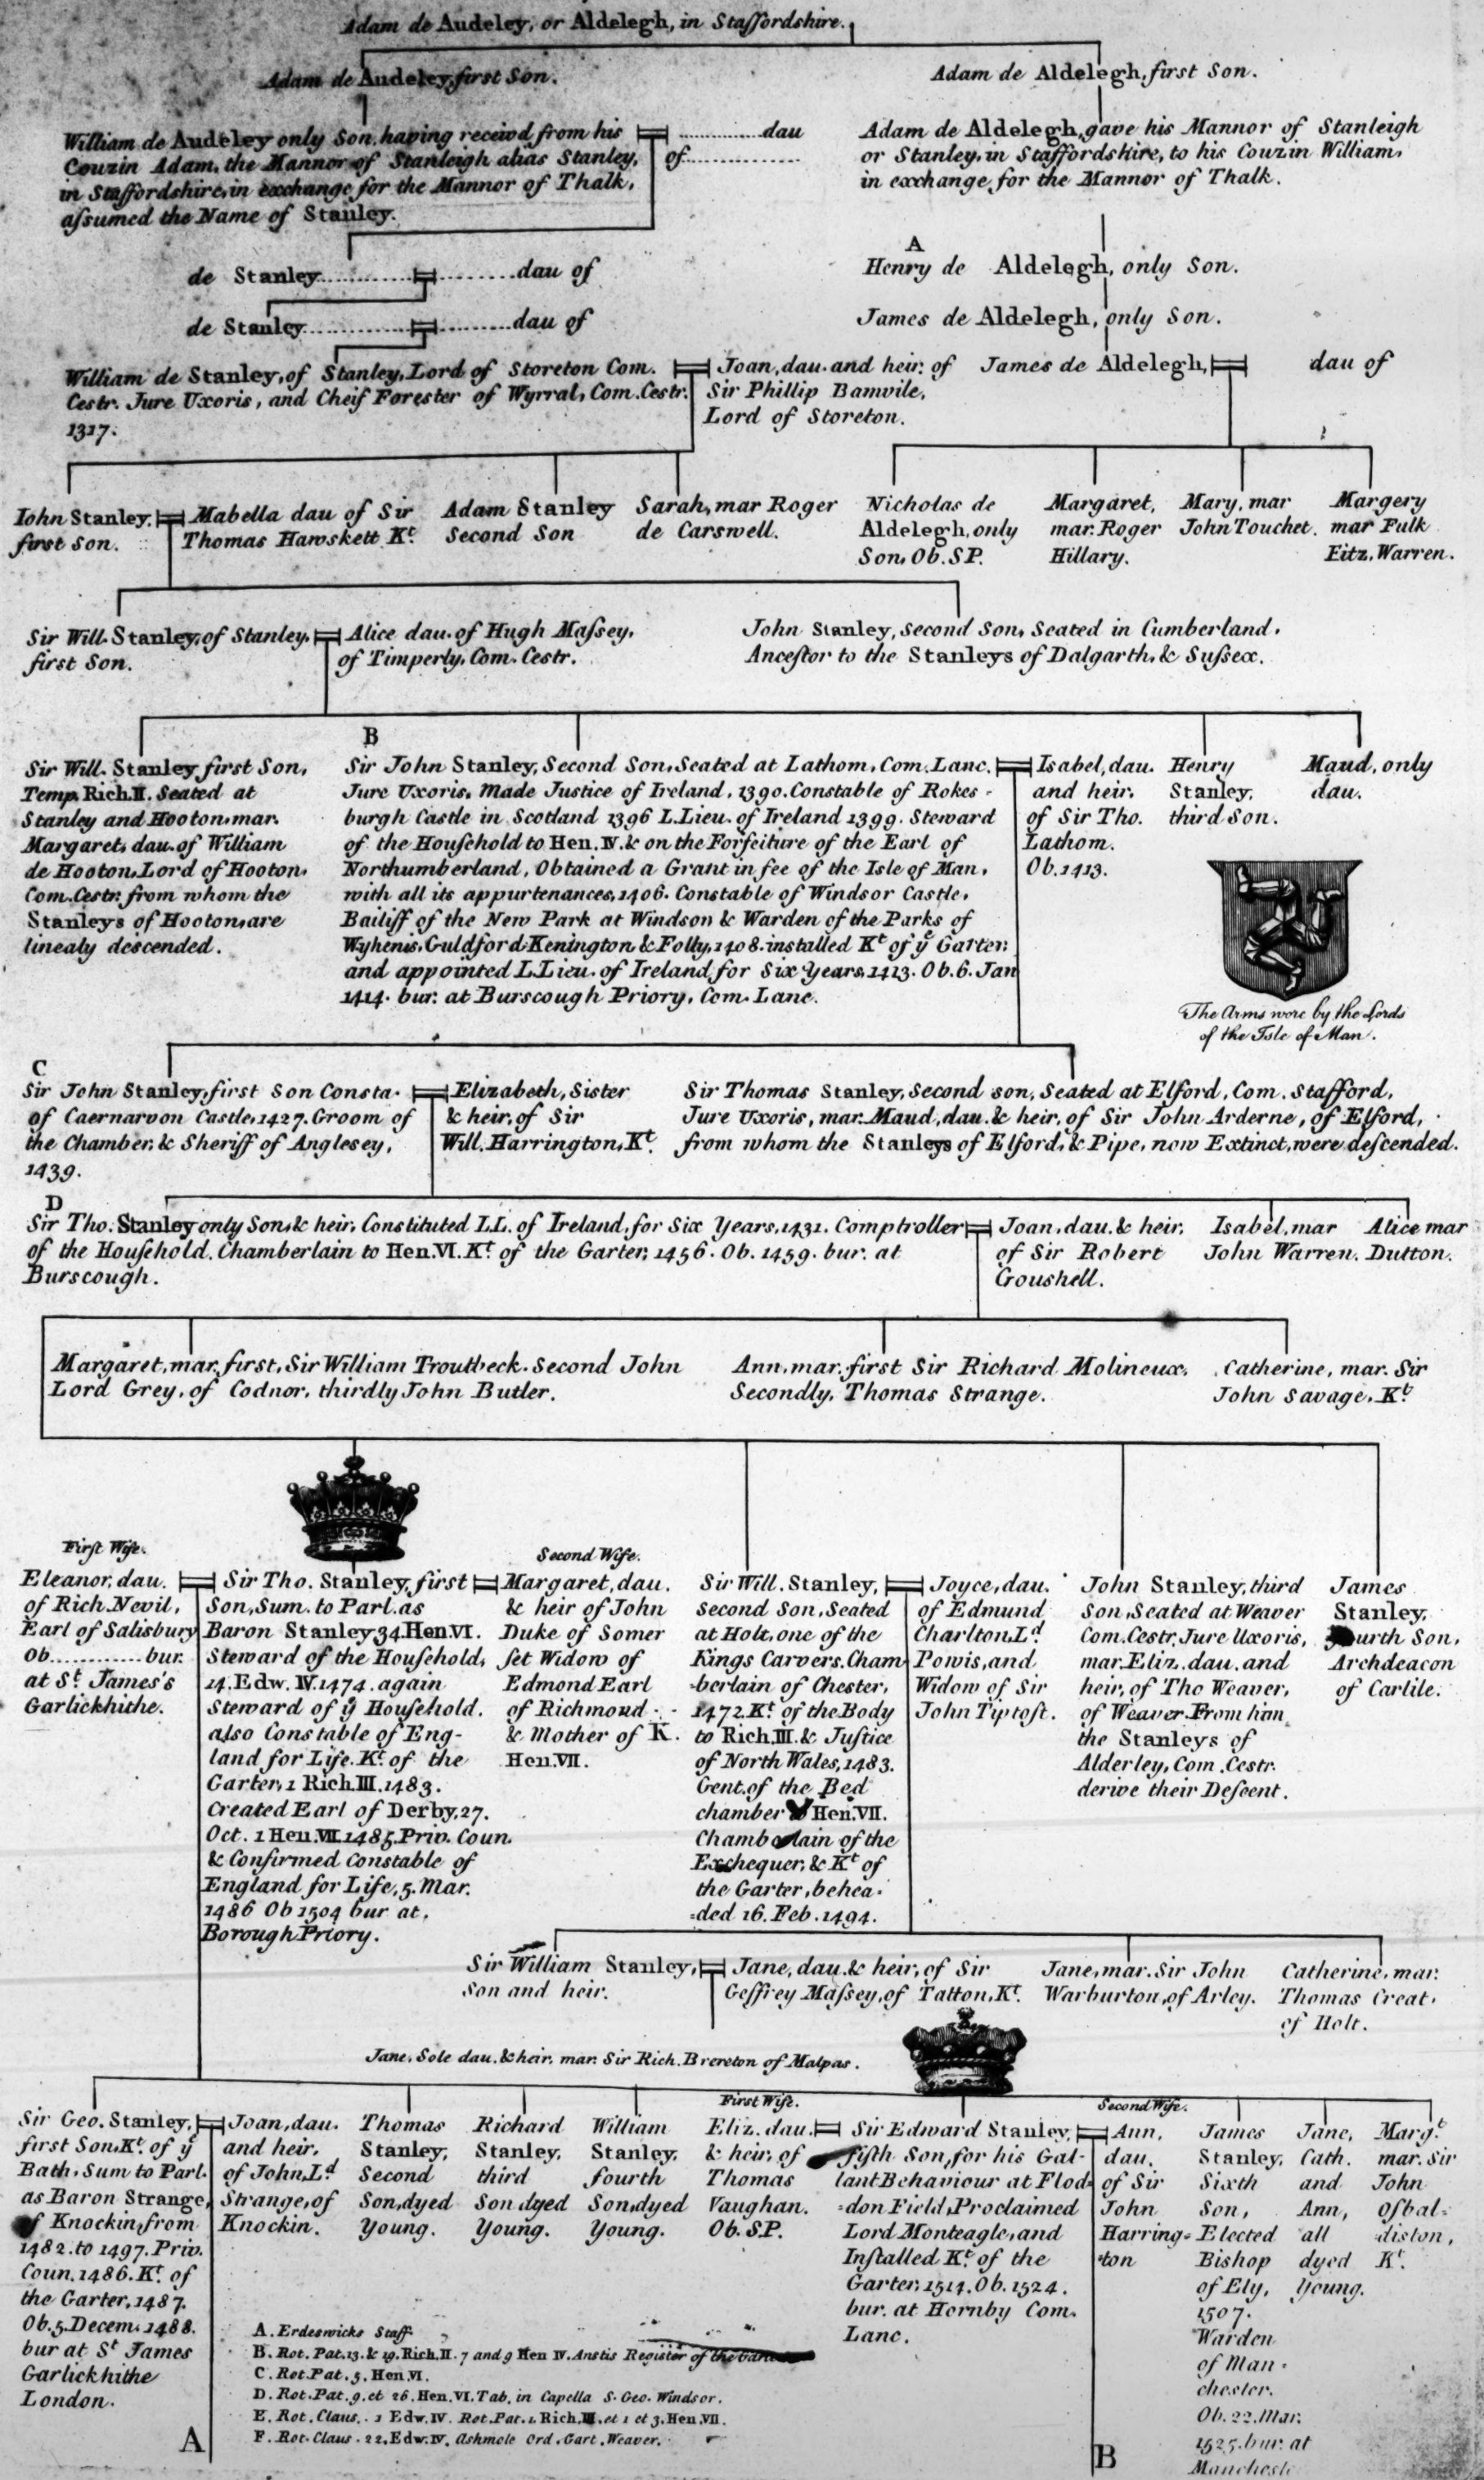

I am very much mortified to find myself thus suddenly prevented from calling with you on Mr. Chayman & availing myself of his kindness in my present journey but I have only this moment learnt that I am obliged to be at the House of Commons before one o'clock, which I shall not be able to manage & profit by your offer, the more so as I should be compelled to come to you by Portland Place, having unfortunately forgotten the address of your Chambers. I return herewith the Papers you were so good as to leave with me, with many thanks.
I am aware of what they contain with the Exception of one name viz. Thomas son of Sir Geo. Stanley of Cressley which I imagine to be a mistake for Edward, who was his eldest son. I am ever faithfully yours
Stanley

On his death the earldom became extinct. As to the barony of Hastings, which commenced by writ in 1296 to John de Hastings, he was only a collateral relation, namely a great nephew of Sir Nicholas Hastings of Lord Hastings, from whom the late Earl of Huntingdon was heir of the body; & as to the new barony so created in the last ment. Lord Hastings, it probably was limited to the heirs male of his body, & if so it should seem to be now extinct equally with the earldom. To H. K. May 18.

 Baron Ashford of Ashford:*

A Genealogical Table of the Noble Family of Keppel

Remarks relating to the House of Keppel.

The Nobility of Guelderland, which in Dutch is called Knighthood, has ever been distinguished. Menestier in his Prouves de la Noblesse, observes, Les Etats les plus celebres pour la Noblesse, sont ceux de la Province de Gueldre, ou cette Noblesse s'est conservée.

The Family of Keppel, is one of the oldest and most distinguished Families of the Nobility of Guelderland. The Family Castle is situated in the Lordship of Keppel, in the County of Zutphen, near the old Assel. This Castle is as considerable for its Antiquity, as for its Great Privileges, of which a Detail may be seen in the Description of Guelderland.

The Three Shells, which are the Arms of this Family, are a distinctive mark of its Antiquity, since they were a Distinction used as early as Anno 1101, by the Knights of Jerusalem. Vide Gill. de Varenne Hist. de la Croisade.
